Here are answers to some frequently asked questions to help you understand and manage your accounts.

SECURITIES ACCOUNT ACCESS LIMITS

Is trading permitted within the securities account being used as collateral for my SBLOC?

Yes, but please be aware that major changes in the asset allocation of this account might reduce the amount available to borrow against the line of credit.

Can I continue to use my securities account check-writing privileges?

Generally, check writing associated with your securities account will be terminated when the account is pledged and your new SBLOC becomes available to you. Remember that your new SBLOC offers check-writing access.

Can I request recurring distributions from my securities account?

Generally, preauthorized recurring distributions will be discontinued when the account is pledged and becomes the collateral for your SBLOC. In certain circumstances, distributions may continue – for instance, if the account holds sufficient value.¹ All recurring distributions should be disclosed for evaluation prior to the establishment of your SBLOC.

Can a distribution be made from my securities account to make an interest or principal payment on my SBLOC?

Yes, you may use your securities account held at your investment institution for the payment, provided there is sufficient value to support the transaction.¹ You can access your account balance and transaction information by phone or online (log on to our Web site and navigate to “My Accounts”).

CREDIT LIMIT

How is the credit limit determined?

The credit limit will be based on the value and type of the underlying collateral in the portfolio. The credit limit itself is determined by multiplying the collateral value by the “Advance Rate” associated with the security class. Note that the advance rate applies to individual securities and mutual funds falling within the specific asset class. Lines of credit that are backed by portfolios allocated across asset classes will be assigned blended advance rates.

Asset Class	Advance Rate
Cash and Equivalent	100%
US Treasury Instruments	90%
Investment-Grade Municipal & Corporate Bonds	80%
Non-Investment Grade Municipal & Corporate Bond Funds	50%
Equities	50%

Special Notes - Asset class advance rates apply for both individual securities and pooled vehicles, like mutual funds and ETFs (with the exception of Non-Investment Grade Fixed Income, which are only acceptable as collateral when held within diversified mutual funds or ETFs). All Treasury, Municipal, and Corporate fixed income instruments are evaluated on Market Value. Concentrated portfolio holdings are subject to reduced advance rate calculations at the discretion of The Bancorp.

What would cause the credit limit on my SBLOC to be reduced?

Your line of credit will automatically be reduced if the value of the underlying collateral of your pledged securities no longer supports your approved line of credit. It is important that you verify your current line of credit and availability before requesting advances or writing checks, as you will not receive specific notice when the line of credit changes.

How do I verify my credit limit and view information about my SBLOC?

You can access your line of credit, availability, account balance and transaction information by phone or by logging in to your account online.

What if a security in the pledged account is no longer eligible to serve as collateral, or if while trading the account, I purchase an ineligible security?

Ineligible securities² are automatically excluded from your securities account for collateral valuation purposes, and your credit limit is adjusted accordingly. In certain circumstances, this could trigger a request for additional assets or a principal repayment. If this occurs, the easiest way to resolve the issue may be to liquidate the ineligible security.³

What happens when the securities account loses value?

Depending on the relation between your account value, line of credit and amount borrowed, collateral devaluations may: (1) have no consequence; (2) limit your access to credit; or (3) require a deposit of additional assets or an immediate payment.

Provide an example of how collateral changes can affect my line of credit.

Suppose you hold a $1 million investment portfolio containing diversified equity and mutual fund securities. The Bank would be willing to lend up to $500,000, with your securities account pledged as collateral. Example A, below, illustrates how the amount is determined by applying an “Advance Rate” to the assets in your account.

In a rising market, you may remove assets exceeding the required $1 million collateral value. These assets may also be used to secure a larger line of credit (see Example B).

Conversely, as the collateral value declines, your borrowing power is reduced proportionally. When the collateral value falls from $1 million to $900,000, as in Example C, your credit limit is automatically reduced to $450,000. Please note that requests for funds (including checks you write) in excess of this amount will not be approved.

If the value declines significantly, you may be asked to place additional assets into the pledged account or to reduce your loan balance. This occurs when the line of credit balance reaches or exceeds the “Maintenance Rate,” shown in Example D.

As a last resort, the Bank may liquidate your assets¹ to repay the line of credit, if the collateral value continues to decline and you are unable to provide additional assets or reduce the outstanding line of credit balance. Liquidation is triggered when the line of credit balance reaches or exceeds the “Liquidation Rate,” as in Example E.

Example	Rate Type	Rate ⁴	Market Value	Credit Limit	Amt Borrowed
A	Advance	50%	$1,000,000	$500,000	$500,000
B	Advance	50%	$1,200,000	$500,000	$500,000
C	Advance	50%	$ 900,000	$450,000	$500,000
D	Maintenance	60%	$ 833,334	$416,667	$500,000
E	Liquidation	70%	$ 714,286	$357,143	$500,000
